NETWORK OF CANALS MAY BE RESTORED

Mighty Scheme of Sir William Wilcocks Appears on Road to Completion.

BY LA MARQUE DE FONTENAY.

CABLE dispatches announcing the inauguration by the Turkish Governor-General of Baghdad, of the Hindieh Dam, or barrage, and the diversion of the waters of the great river Euphrates, into their old channel, past Babylon, would lead to the belief that the mighty scheme of irrigation of the Tigris and of the Euphrates, devised by Sir William Wilcocks, was on the road to completion.

It was a scheme which provided for the reconstruction of the completely ruined network of canals of the pre-Christian era, and for the creation of an entirely new system of irrigation by means of which all that portion of Mesopotamia was to be restored to what it was in ancient times, namely, the granary of the world.

But this belief is doomed to disappointment, and there is every reason to fear that now that the Hindieh barrage is completed, the remainder of the vast project will be abandoned for a generation or so to come, and that the world will have been disappointed beyond reverting the Euphrates into its old channel, past Babylon, by the waters of which the Jews, hundreds of years before Christ, mourned their captivity and their exile, the remembrance of their distant Zion.

The barrage at Hindieh was only the initial feature of the entire system, which was to have cost some $16,000,000. The Turkish government in 1905 not only entrusted Sir William Wilcocks with the creation of the Nile, and Nile Valley irrigation works, with the designing of a similar system in the Tigris and Euphrates regions, but also appointed him adviser in the Tigris and Euphrates regions, and as a beginning the building of the Hindieh barrage was confided to the great English contracting firm of Sir John Jackson, Limited, by which the work in question has now been completed.

But the chauvinism of the Young Turk extremist party led to revolutionary outbreaks and insurrectionary risings in all parts of the Ottoman empire, culminating in the war in the Balkans and the consequent disasters. The result has been that all the remainder of the Wilcocks project, beyond the now completed Hindieh barrage, has been abandoned, for many years to come, owing to lack of money, and that Sir William Wilcocks, himself, despairing of the realization of his cherished plans, has severed his connection with the Ottoman government, and has resigned his office of adviser of the Sultan, and the Hindieh barrage, and has returned to England.

Turkish finances are crippled to such an extent that it is idle to expect that it will have any funds available for years hence, and the only way in which the project could be carried out in the nearer future would be if the Sultan were willing to grant a concession to some English, European or American, to build the Hindieh barrage, and to undertake the cost of construction, recouping itself by the sale of water and of the land restored to cultivation by irrigation.

The Porte would benefit by so doing. For it would derive a considerable accession of revenue from the taxation of these lands restored to agriculture, and which are now waste, barren and unproductive. But international jealousy on the part of the foreign powers has resisted the Sultan, and he has refused to grant such a concession would furnish additional pretexts to the foreign nations for their interference in the affairs of his empire, and for the further alienation of his territory, which would cause him to delay indefinitely, coming to any decision about the matter.

Whereas in England members of all religious denominations, Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, Jews, Moslems and agnosts, are taxed by the state for the support of the Established Church of England, that is to say, of the state church, in Germany only those are required to contribute to the Lutheran state church who belong thereto. The result of this is that there is an ever growing number of desertions from the state Lutheran Church, prompted by a desire to evade these church taxes.

The increase of desertions has become so phenomenal of late as to give serious concern to the leaders of the establishment, and particularly to the Emperor and Empress.

One of the things of which the imperial couple undoubtedly were the most proud was the fact that since their accession to the throne they had contributed so largely to popularizing anew church-going, to rendering piety fashionable, partly through precept, and partly through bestowing their favor upon these building and endowing churches. That this success of theirs should now be compromised by these desertions from the church affects them very deeply.

The Kaiser, moreover, sees in these defections a danger to the dynasty and the state. For he looks upon the abandonment of the church as a step, not only towards irreligion, but also towards that socialism which, in his eyes, is the principal peril and foe of his government.

At his instance, and at that of the Empress, endeavors are now being made by the government to stem the movement away from the church by rendering very much heavier the fees demanded by the state for each act of the re-nunciation of the church. But this, after all, is a very unsatisfactory method of keeping citizens against their will, to prevent the holding of Protestant establishments, and the matter is organizing everywhere public meetings to protest against this increase of the fees; while the government, through the police, is endeavoring to prevent the holding of such meetings, and the matter is giving rise to a considerable amount of popular commotion and ill-will.

It is not particularly edifying, no matter which way one looks at it, either that people should be deserting their church in order to avoid paying the fee, or that the government should be endeavoring to keep them within the sheepfold by making them pay an extortionate fee for leaving their fold. It comes down to a sordid question of money.

Miss Edith Durham is so well known to the readers of this paper in the United States, in connection with her letters, her magazine articles, and her books, on the subject of Albania, Montenegro, Serbia and conditions in the Balkans generally, that her receipt of the gold medal of the Order of Merit, which he bestowed upon her in 1907, cannot but arouse interest.

She declines to wear or retain the medal as a memento, not because of anything done by King Nicholas or the members of his house, but as a protest against the cruelties practiced by the Montenegrins in Albania during the last year or so. She claims that the Albanians have suffered more at the hands of the Montenegrins than the Servians during the last eighteen months, than in all the centuries of Turkish oppression and persecution; and as she has received universal acknowledgment of the splendid work which she has done in connection with the relief of the sick, wounded and suffering, in the Southeast of Europe, since the beginning of the war in the Balkans, her views are entitled to consideration.

Miss Durham is not, as so many people seem to believe, an American, but an Englishwoman, is a clever artist, has exhibited with considerable success at the Royal Academy in London; but during the past eight or ten years has devoted herself to the study of conditions in the Southeast of Europe, and especially to good works there, in aid of universal admiration and the good will and gratitude of the people for whom she labored.

The return to a sovereign of a decoration bestowed by him is relatively rare; far more so than the receipt of a knighthood or a baronetcy, kind in the first place, and it is usually done, as in the case of Miss Durham, as a species of protest against some act either of the crown or of the nation that bestowed the order.

NEW HIGH RECORD IN EXPORT TRADE

Bureau Predicts That 1913 Value Will Amount to About $2,500,000,000.

BIG INCREASE OVER 1912

Trade Balance in Favor of the United States Approximates $750,000,000.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Washington, January 4.—American export trade made a new high record during the year 1913, according to statistics compiled by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to-day.

The bureau predicts that exports for this period will approximate $2,500,000,000, against $2,293,217,993 in 1912. Imports during 1913 will approximate $1,750,000,000 in value, leaving an export balance in favor of the United States of $750,000,000.

In imports the total for 1913 will be less than that of 1912, but larger than that of any year preceding. This decline in imports in 1913 is due in part to reduction in prices of certain articles imported. While the quantity of sugar imported in the ten months ending with October exceeded that of the corresponding period of 1912 by 368,000,000 pounds, the value of this larger quantity imported during the 1913 period was $2,000,000 less than that of the corresponding period of 1912.

Coffee imports are much below those of 1912, the figures for the ten months ending with October, 1913, being 638,000,000 pounds, against 752,000,000 in the same period of last year, and the value but $80,000,000, against $14,000,000 in the corresponding months of last year.

On the export side crude foodstuffs and manufacturers' materials showed a marked increase, crude foodstuffs showing for the ten months ended with October, 1913, a total of $150,500,000, against $135,000,000 in the same months of 1912. Manufacturers' goods for further use in manufacturing exports amounted to $329,000,000 in the ten months ended with October last, against $229,000,000 in the corresponding period of the preceding year, and manufacturers' goods ready for consumption, $659,000,000, against $607,000,000 in the corresponding months of the preceding year.

The increase in foreign exports occurs chiefly in wheat, corn, barley, oats, flour, bacon and lard. The increase in manufacturers' exports was chiefly in automobiles, railway cars, electric machinery, manufactures of iron and steel, lumber, copper and mineral oil.
